

Chad Grundy Biography

Chad Grundy is the current undertreasurer of the Carolina Conference, and he is a proud product of Seventh-day Adventist education. He attended Adventist schools from elementary to college, and he graduated from Southern Adventist University with a B.S. degree in business administration.

Chad's professional experience includes serving as an accountant at Highland Academy, as well as managing the Adventist Book Center in the Gulf States Conference. He also worked as an assistant treasurer for the Kentucky-Tennessee Conference before moving to the Carolina Conference in 2007 to serve as the Association treasurer. Chad has been the undertreasurer of the Carolina Conference since 2011.

Chad is married to Amy Bennett Grundy, a registered nurse who was also his classmate in college. Together, they have three children: Ashley, who is an elementary teacher, Allison, who is currently a student at Southern Adventist University, and Chad Jr., who is also a student at Southern Adventist University.

Aside from his work in finance, Chad also has a passion for technology and its potential use in ministry. He enjoys traveling to different churches within the Conference to speak and connect with the members, learning about their needs for support and growth.